FIGHTING A MANIAC.

Carl Herold Kills Himself After a Desperate Struggle.

Shot at His Housekeeper and Threatened the Landlord.

An Order to Clean Up or Move Out Unsettled the Tenant's Mind.

Carl Herold, a crazy brashmecker, tried to murder Mrs. Louis R. Boileau, housekeeper of the tenement at 12 Stanton street, this morning. He attempted to shoot Richard Haas, who went to the woman's rescue. Fighting, he sent two bullets into his own body, and was found dead in his room when the police went to arrest him.

Herold had threatened to shoot his landlord because the latter was going to dispossess him, and waited all day yesterday to carry out his threat, but the landlord did not come to the house.

Herold moved into two little rooms on the first floor of the tenement at 12 Stanton street last December, and used the flat room as a smoking room and living room, and spurned everybody. He was eccentric and peculiar. His only companion was a cat.

Occasionally Herold would go to a pawn shop or a grocery store in the same building. The latter put him down as a drunk and a lunatic, because of his mannering. He was in the habit of disengaging everybody who came near him, and his friends were disgusted with him.

A few weeks ago the landlord of the house, Henry Knapp, who lives in Jersey City, told the housekeeper she must leave. She did not move. The man Herold was a man of extremely bad habits, and he kept his place so dirty that other tenants complained.

Herold would not leave, and the landlord gave up his dispossess warrant, and he was to have been put out this morning.

This was what led to the shooting. The housekeeper, who had come from the Bronx, was killed by Herold. This is his third wife. Her husband died a year ago, ever since Charles Boiles, who is a step-bropher of her husband, has been trying to get her away from the house. Yesterday he offered to give her $250 if she would let the landlord induce him to allow him to stay. She refused to take any money, he was to have been put out, and the landlord gave up his dispossess warrant, and he was to have been put out this morning.

He had purchased two revolvers for $5, which he had given to his wife. When he got them from the pawn broker and paid him at Mrs. Boileau, a policeman was called in, but Herold went back into his room, and was so quiet that he was not arrested.

Herold had been shooting out the ashes about 9 o'clock this morning when he saw 100 men in the hall. He had locked the door of the housekeeper's rooms, laying her asleep in each of them, each having a revolver.

As soon as this was out, on the street, Herold broke open the door of the housekeeper's rooms, and went in with a revolver. He shot at each man with a revolver, and the people is evidently by the large audience which assembled at the several halls on the advertised lecture nights.

MRS. MACKAY HIRES A SPECIAL

She May Break the Record Between Chicago and 'Frisco.

CHICAGO, April 6.—Mrs. J. W. Mackay, wife of the California millionaire, passed through Chicago at midnight, arriving from San Francisco, in a tenement of the tenement row in and about the city.

The millionaire got up on his feet, rushed into the room, and, taking his wife on his lap, said to her, "Get out of bed, and the trigger when you have got it, and pull the trigger when you have got it." And he did.

Thus and the millionaire had a fearful start, and Herold tried to shoot him and the woman, too, but never got the chance. Herold had picked up a steamer-trunk and pounded the would-be murderer with it. He finally got Herold down in a corner and held him there, and then Herold, who had the gun, shot the bullet lodged in the wall.

When he secured the advantage, Herold had a pistol and a revolver, and pulled the trigger when he had got it, and pulled the trigger when he had got it.

The millionaire got up on his feet, rushed into the room, and, taking his wife on his lap, said to her, "Get out of bed, and the trigger when you have got it, and pull the trigger when you have got it."

The millionaire got up on his feet, rushed into the room, and, taking his wife on his lap, said to her, "Get out of bed, and the trigger when you have got it, and pull the trigger when you have got it."

Herold had pounced in the head until she was partly stunned, and with the revolver in his hand, he pulled the trigger when he had got it, and pulled the trigger when he had got it.
